Delphic Oracle - Oracle at the Temple of Apollo in Delphi, located at the foot of the Parnass Mountain in Fokhid. According to ancient Greek mythology, built by Apollo on the spot of his victory over the monstrous snake in Pyfon. Nominally the main person was a priestess (Pythia), but in fact all predictions proceeded from the priests of the temple.

In antiquity, Oracle had stunning fame and often had an impact on the course of history. Many famous historical figures appealed to him for predictions regarding one question. Oracle's responses were seriously serious because they considered them solutions "over".

Oracles in ancient Greece

In the Allen world, the practice of appeal to the gods was very common. Heavenly forces appeared in different cases, especially when serious issues were addressed.

Next to some temples lived trained priests - oracles. Interesting the fact that in Delphi prophesied the priestess (Pythia), whereas mostly oracles were men. Since only rich people had access to the Delphian Oracle, the people had to be satisfied with the interpretation of stray progressants.

It is worth noting that the Delphic Oracle, that is, Pythia, often answered questions of the questions in the question very abstract, which gave rise to a dual sense and lost specifics. In addition, in history, enough cases have been preserved when the peephs bribe them so that they were called as "need."
